

Connecting livestock producers with landowners

The South Dakota Soil Health Coalition has created an online Grazing Exchange to connect livestock producers with landowners who have available cropland or forage to graze. See their notice at <https://www.sdsoilhealthcoalition.org/south-dakota-grazing-exchange/>

Or go directly to the completely free, publicly accessible exchange map at <https://sdgrazingexchange.com> that's been developed through a grant agreement with the USDA-Natural Resources Conservation Service.

Additional educational resources included on the site include fact sheets on a variety of topics related to livestock integration, crop residue, and cover crops, contracting resources, as well as the contact information or links for organizations that can provide additional technical assistance. For additional information or questions about the South Dakota Grazing Exchange please contact the SDSHC at sdsoilhealth@gmail.com or (605) 280-4190, or ask your local NRCS office for more information.

We are passing this information on to you as a non-operator landowner who has indicated an interest in receiving more information on healthy soils. The Grazing Exchange is something you may want to consider if you own land or have pasture, native grass, crop residue or cover crops available to be grazed, and need to find someone with livestock who needs more land to graze.
